Trade Union Policy Institute
(GEFONT-TUPI)
We believe, the people’s uprising of 2006, after gaining overwhelming support, transformed itself into a peaceful peoples’ revolution, which was original to Nepali reality both in terms of the extent and leadership, rested on the ideal of People’s Multi-Party Democracy (PMPD). Contrast with the European or Chinese model of revolution, it became possible through collaboration between two competing Classes – the class of the Haves and that of the Have-nots! It brought about a historical political change, but is yet to trigger a socio-economic and cultural transformation. The movement concluded with the establishment of rights, but is yet to create an environment in which the rights can be realised. Most important, the hegemony of the anti-working class is yet to end.

It is the base, where GEFONT Trade Union Policy Institute (TUPI) rests! It believes to develop a plural and equitable society with participatory democracy and social justice!
The Vision

Definitely, Nepali society is in a difficult phase of transition. There are a number of challenges and critical realities to be faced by society and working class. In the process of long transition and instability, ensuring political space for working class is the major challenge ahead. Building workers power and developing forces of production is, as we envision, the essential way forward to address these problems. Building of the workers power forms the backbone of the process of peaceful transformation. To balance the movement for Rights and Interest with the process of production, reinvestment and redistribution is the best way to operate what we call "class struggle" in the new realities of the time.

Nepali society is itself a unique mosaic of minorities. We are proud on this unique reality of our society (also reflected in the development of PMPD).
The peoples from caste groups to ethnic/aboriginals are largely divided into two competing class. However, in countries like ours where multi lingual, caste/ethnicity and multi cultural societal structure with everywhere diversity; it is just impractical to follow 'others policy-application'.

We are endorsing an economic policy (we have termed it, 3-Pillar of our economy!) based on public-private-cooperative model, a system emerged under broader periphery of PMPD. It is our way forward for achieving welfare state in a track of broad socialist philosophy. It demands for reshaping of production relation and labour relation in a long-term perspective, which becomes lively through the vision of TUPI - Co-existence: Foundation for Production Relation and Labour Relation.
The TUPI

Fight against inequality is inevitable and unavoidable which requires policy and activism to go together in harmony with action-research, education, awareness and mobilisation. If it is successfully moved forward with determined efforts, Labour politics can be shifted to a new dimension.

In order to uplift labour politics to a new paradigm, a separate policy analysis wing, as GEFONT feels, has now been inevitable. To fulfil this need of the society and working people, a motion to form TUPI has been adopted from the GEFONT Sixth National Congress of March 2014, by unanimous support of the delegates.
The Congress has designed the concept of TUPI in order to:

- Work as 'think tank wing' which GEFONT can rely on for policy matters
- Involve scholars in different segments of labour and political movement to prepare materials on general/prevailing policy issues and give necessary feedback to GEFONT National Executive Committee;
- Replace Central Planning Commission, active till last tenure
